Lapses were evidently not foreseen when the Budget estimates for the current year were prepared and submitted. The completion of incomplete works is unavoidable and cannot be postponed. Is it not therefore a proper case for an additional grant under the Budget Rules? On this point the Comptroller may officially be

In the interest of Economy, Works in progress should be completed as soon as possible but under Budget rule a regrant of lapses is inadmissible.

The usual practice is to treat the cost of completing Works in progress as the first charge against the total grant of the department, and an officer who has failed to work up his programme for any year is required to curtail or modify his programme for the next year to make room for emergent expenditure on incomplete works.

This course does not necessarily mean a real hardship for experience shows that in the D. W. Deptt a certain lapse is always inevitable and with the ordinary practice of providing for all foreseen expenditure, any unshaken balance of the Grant of a previous year is counter-balanced by a similar lapse in the following year; and in the final result the Budget rule is well maintained.

The rule and practice is well understood by a spending officer who knows his work and his department and there is no occasion for any clamour for additional funds.

In a case like this, therefore Government should insist on the expenditure being incurred and met by reappropriation from existing funds, and as I have shown above, the course need not necessarily cause any difficulty to a spending officer who knows his business.

NOTE—Contn. sheet

Serial
No.

This means that the whole of the Budget grant has been spent on incomplete works, and that no funds whatever would be forthcoming for new works to be started this year. It further means that notwithstanding the expenditure of the whole of the grant on the incomplete works, there would still be left a portion of those works to be provided for in the next year's Budget. All this is the outcome of our Board's not understanding the financial rules of procedure properly. Under the circumstances & unless however, the Comptroller's view may be communicated to the President & the additional grant asked for refused. The order may be published & circulated for the information & guidance of all Sanitary Municipal Boards. H.
